When to call for an Ethics Consult Service
Dilemmas and conflict may arise when a patient, family member, health care professional or the hospital has different ideas about values, responsibilities and loyalties. Also, when questions such as, “What is the right thing to do?” come into the decision making process this is when you can call for an Ethics Consult Service to assists you.

The Consultation Process
Following a request for consultation, a representative of the Ethics Consult Service will speak with the individual requesting assistance. If further discussion is needed, a meeting will be scheduled to include the patient and/or their family or representative, the health care providers involved in the case and other members of the health care team.

During this private meeting open and honest discussion will be encouraged about the clinical circumstances and the ethical concerns, and an attempt will be made to resolve the conflict. The Ethics Consultant assists by facilitating the discussion, helping to outline the ethical issues, and may offer suggestions as to what actions may be reasonable.

The final decisions are to be made by the patient and his/her representative in conjunction with the patient’s physician and other members of the health care team.
